May 13, 2013 - Requests for Proposals (RFPs) can be an invaluable source of new business opportunities for your company as long as you know what they are, where to find them, and how to make strategic decisions regarding them.

Simple Clear Answer to the Question

WHAT IS A RFP?

Quite simply:

"A request for proposal (RFP) is a solicitation document that an organization posts to elicit bids from potential vendors in order to procure a product or service through the responding business proposals. The RFP process is meant to bring structure and transparency to the procurement decision, while reducing risk through open requirements and discussion."

So to recap, you can get more engagement and more targeted followers on your Google Plus page if you:

1. Fill out your profile and write down a few different types of people you want to target.
2. Get Circroscope so you have an easy tool for managing your Google Plus circles.
3. Find communities, users, Google Plus posts, and even events on the type of content you are sharing, then add them to your circles.
4. Monitor the engagement of the people you are circling, and move those who are engaging (or are publishing great content you want to consume) into more permanent circles.
5. Clean up your circles on a regular basis.

How do you implement a NoFollow Attribute on a Link?

1. Identify the pages and the links on those pages on which you want to place the NoFollow attribute. The attribute should be placed within the anchor tag, which is another name for the code for that link.
2. Include the NoFollow attribute within your link

Nofollow Attribute Video Tutorial Script

Today I am going to explain how to implement a NoFollow tag, and when you should consider using it.

What Does a NoFollow Attribute Do?

A NoFollow attribute is an instruction to the search engines, telling them that you don't want to pass PageRank through a link. You should use it when you don't want to vouch for the quality of the page receiving the link.

The Content Provided a Lot More Info Than Just the "How To"

NoFollow attribute is what happens to the PageRank. In reality, the PageRank is not redistributed through the link to a page, it may still be crawled, and it may still be indexed. Similar, this can happen if other pages link to that page without a NoFollow on those links.

For that reason, I don't recommend implementing the NoFollow attribute on links that point to other pages on your own site. It's best to use other tags if you feel that these pages are of poor quality.
